The New Public Schools.

A CRITIC reporter on Saturday accompanied Mr. Entwisle on a trip to the new school buildings, known as the Henry and U street schools.

The Henry school building has assumed an imposing appearance with its large proportions and neat design, and has externally the signs of rapidly approaching completion.

The building inside is the most commodious, carefully arranged and designed in the District, and affords large, well heated, well ventilated, well lighted school-rooms.

The minor details are well arranged, and the means of exit in case of alarm are sufficiently numerous to insure safety.

The stairways, railways and halls are all fireproof.

The atmosphere was peculiarly clear last night, and doubtless the whole population turned out to take a look at our new celestial visitor, which was blazing in full effulgence in the northeastern section of the heavens. A in the northeastern section of the heavens. A reporter of The Caitric called upon Dr. H. Haumond, of 625 Fourth street northwest, to tell him something about the comet. Dr. H. has had prepared a large chart of the heavens, pictorially illustrated, with a view of showing the exact position of the comet. This comet is in the constellation of Auriga, and is now rushing toward the sun at the rate of about four degrees in twenty-four hours. It is southwest from the star Capella about 15°, and north of the star Betelgeux, in the constellation of Orion, about 25°, and northwest of the star Aldebaran in the Bull's Eye (sign of Taurus) baran in the Bull's Eye (sign of Taurus) about 26°. The comet may best be seen about 3°, m. in the northeast about 30° above the horizon. Its disk is apparently about the size of a man's hand half doubled up, and its trail apparently about the length of a walking stick. The position of the comet, geographically speaking, is nearly 40° of north latitude and 80° of west longitude. It may be of some comfort to those nervously inclined, to state that the wrial visitor is not expected by the savants to do any smashing of earthly things.

Funeral of the Late A. G. Mackey. Yesterday afternoon the funeral of the late Albert G. Mackey took place from All Church under Masonie auspie There was a profusion of flowers in the church and well-arranged mourning decochurch and well-arranged mourning deco-rations. All the prominent Masons from this city, Baltimore and Alexandria were present. Rev. Father Shippen, pastor, con-ducted the regular service. He was followed by Albert Pike, Grand Commander of the Supreme Council, who conducted the beautiful funeral services of the order. During the ceremonies Mr. Pike appeared especially imposing. The interment took place at Glenwood Cemetery. The funeral escort was DeMolay (mounted) Commandery, K. T.; Potomac Commandery, K. T.; Columbia Commandery, K. T.; Washington Commandery, K. WHITNEY.

The Shot Fired by Jas. Y. Christmas—Particulars of the Affair—What a Family Feud Leads to—Testimony at the Coroner's Inquest—Christmas Sent to Jail.

Saturday afternoon, at 5 o'clock, James Y. Christmas shot and instantly killed Wm. G. Whitney, at No. 1326 I street northwest, in the building known as the Catacazy Mansion, and now occupied by the Misses Harrover, as a boarding-house. Here Mrs. Myra Clark Gaines had been living with her son and his wife and their three children and her son-in-law, Mr. Christmas and his three motherless children. The two men had been in the hair-mattress business as partners, but, owing to some disagreements, the partnership was dissolved. Whitney then went into business with H. A. Linger & Co., 1117 Nincteenth street.

Whitney was a drinking man and had a very violent temper, and the differences between the two men increased in intensity until they became such hitter enemies that they did not cat at the same table. Besides the business differences between the two men. Whitney became jealous of the atten-

The whole design and execution of this structure are calcalated to make a healthy, convenient, pleasant school-house, and the architects, builders and the Commissioners particularly, deserve praise for this successful effort to provide seven hundred and twenty of the children of the District with these splendid school facilities.

The location of the school, which has called forth more comment than the building itself, is much better than would be supposed by those who have read the complaints against it.

The view from the four windows is a fine one with a clear outlook toward the north and cast. The situation is such as will prevent the school from ever being closely surrounded by other buildings.

The action of the Commissioners in changing the location of the police station from the corner to the middle of the lot at Seventh and O streets, removes some of the objections, as the sounds from one building will rarely be audible in the other, and prisoners will be taken tuto the station along Seventh street, and not in from of either of the school streets will be taken tuto the station along Seventh street, and not in from of either of the school streets will be taken tuto the station along Seventh street, and not in from of either of the school streets will be taken tuto the station along Seventh street, and not in from of either of the school streets will be taken tuto the station along Seventh streets, and accommodating a large will immediately commence.

The Ustreet school for colored children is also nearing completion, and is marked for its systematic blending of economy with convenience, and accommodating a large number of scholars in an acceptable way at small expense to the District.

Mr. Whitney fell upon his face, his head just touching the floor and his feet about three steps up; he was on the lower portion of the steps. Did not see Mr. Christmas with a pistol, nor did he hear him say anything about killing Whitney; never saw either of them have a pistol. Mr. Whitney had no business downstairs, as his dinner was always served upstairs in his room.

Judge J. J. Hayden testified that he asked who shot Whitney, when Mr. Christmas stepped forward and said: "I did, but it was in self-defense." Mr. Christmas said, "Sendfor a physician!" He had never heard either party use threats.

Mrs. Dr. Wheat, whom Christmas was assisting down stairs at the time of the killing, was then sworn. She said Mr. Christmas was descending the stairs in company with her when his little son rushed before them and said something; did not know what; saw Mr. Whitney coming down, and knowing the feeling between the two men, concluded to get away as soon as possible; had just entered the dining room when the body pitched down stairs almost at her feet; I heard an exclamation and turned quickly, just in time to see Mr. Whitney's arm raised in the air; Mr. Whitney at this time was standing on the second step from the top, and Mr. Christmas was on the lower floor; Mr. Whitney had a slight stick in his left hand, and his right was on his hip, as if scarching for a pistol.

EFFECT OF THE SHOT.

Dr. J. F. Hartigan testified to making an examination of the body and finding a pistol-shot wound; the ball penetrated the cartilage of the third rib, passing through the pulmonary artery, and lodged in the fifth dorsal vertebræ; death was caused by shock and hemorrhage.

The jury then retired for consultation, but shortly returned with the following VERDICT:

Yesterday afternoon, at 3 o'clock, Christmas was placed in the prison van, accompanied by his two sons, and driven to the District jail, where he was assigned to a cell. His sons kissed him at the jail entrance, having been refused admission within its walls.

The deceased was a son of Mrs. Gaines by her first husband., William Whitney, of Philadelphis. Lie resided here up to the time of the war, and always bore the name of his stepfat'aer, Gen. Gaines, until a few years ago, when on account of some family troubles he dropped the name of his stepfather and assumed that of his own paternal ancestor. He was always known as Will Gaines here until his return from the war, and to the day of his death his old friends always addressed him as Gaines. He always signed his name as William Gaines until

His mother, Mrs. Myra Clark Gaines, and his sister, Miss Rhoda Whitney, whose first busband was Dr. Strother, of Kentucky, from whom she was divorced and afterward married Christmas, were subjected to much harsh treatment by the Union forces, and through orders from Secretary Seward compelled to leave Washington in the dead cold of winter and conveyed across the lines to the South.

The deceased was a man of much magnetism of nature and always bore the honored repute of being as true a friend as ever existed. His heart and his purse was ever ready at a call from a friend.

From youth to his death he had been a subject of epileptic fits, and this weakness, added to a life-long excessive use of tobacco, rendered him nervous and at times uncontrollable. The day previous to the homicide he was seized with a fearfully violent attack of epilepsy.

Mr. Whitney was a native of Philadelphia, but, after the marriage of his mother to Gen. Gaines, the family removed to Louisiana and he was reared in the South.

Mrs. Gaines was fully cognizant of the unfortunate difficulty existing between her son and son-in-law, and acted as mediator between them, in order to bring about a restoration of their former amicable relations, but never dreamed that there could arise from their misunderstanding any serious difficulty which would result so fatally. She had advised Mr. Christmas not to take any notice of her son, who, when he became any notice of her son, who, when he became excited from his afflictions of epilepsy, was not responsible. The peculiar relations of Mrs. Gaines to the parties make her position most painfully distressing, and we learn this sudden blow has utterly prostrated her.

THE ANNUAL GOOD TIME OF OUR GERMAN FRIENDS AT THE

A Better Day than Usual for the Opening-The Parade and Route of Procession-A Prospect of an En-joyable Week-Fun for the Million During the Week.

During the Week.

It was a little bit hazy this morning and threatening clouds overhead created an impression in some quarters that it would rain to-day, but despite these forebodings our enthusiastic German citizens were up early and active in preparing for the great annual festival of the WASHINGTON SCHUETZEN VEREIN, which began to-day. The festivities will continue several days, closing Thursday evening next, unless bad weather inter-venes, in which event it will be kept up Friday. It is unnecessary to recount here the many attractions to be offered during the festival, as it is too well known among all classes what an endless amount of genuine fun and pleasure is offered to the public by our jolly Schuetzers annually. IMPOSING STREET PARADE.

The festivities to-day were opened, as usual, by an imposing street parade. This attracted considerable attention. The members of the Vercin and others participating, in gay uniforms with bright sashes, flags and gaily decorated wagons and richly ca-parisoned horses, began to assemble at the on Pennsylvania avenue between Four-andhalf and Sixth stree's about 9 o'clock. The scene was animated and attracted a large crowd. Two bands of music, one in front of the hotel and the other inside, added to the interest of the occasion by playing appropriate airs at proper intervals. In the meantime, while these preparations were in progress, another scene of interest was presented

AT ABNER'S CONCERT HALL and Garden, on E street. That place was the rendezvous of the Schuetzen Cadets, un-der command of Master Ewald Engel. They marched from Abner's to Myer's Hotel about 9:45 o'clock, forming an escort for the SCHUETZEN KING, EDWARD ABNER. This party was received at Myer's Hotel with enthusiasm. Shortly after their arrival the escort previously sent for the president, Charles Ebel, arrived, being also received with distinguished honors.

ROUTE OF PROCESSION. When formed, the precession marched to the foot of the Capitol, then countermarched to Ninth street, up Ninth to F, along F to Eleventh, thence to I street, to Seventeenth street, to Pennsylvania avenue, passing the President's Mansion. Proceeding to Seventh street the procession turned northward and continued without interruption or accident to the park, where they were received with a salute of artillery, fired by the Schuetzen battery from the open field facing the park.

duties so that this festival should be second to none yet held. He announced that he had received notice that a large delegation of the Schuetzen Association of Baltimore would arrive here Wednesday.

Honorary President Simon Wolf was the next speaker. He reviewed the past and compared the present as being favorable with festivals previously held, and thanked the Verein for the confidence reposed in
